In the years 1990 through 2010, South Florida's business landscape has been a mix of iconic, long-time leaders alongside those “newcomers” bringing about significant change to their industries and the local market alike.

This year is no different. This year’s 10 South Florida business icons, as well as scores of Ultimate CEO honorees, are joined by nearly 75 leaders new to the list. Together, they epitomize what’s unique to South Florida’s economy.

“Newcomer,” however, isn’t really a fair description. Many of the “new” CEO and employer names reflect companies well known in the community. But there are plenty of fresh faces. We’re seeing companies in innovative sectors gaining prominence, second-generation progeny ascending into leadership roles, and even longtime business professionals chairing civic and nonprofit organizations.

The honorees reflect sectors vital to the local economy. A shortlist would include law and accounting, banking and finance, construction and development, health care, real estate, technology, education, economic development – and the region’s most enduring industries, tourism and hospitality, and agriculture.

While their companies and sectors are dramatically different, as you will read in their responses to the Q&A, each brings a commitment to the community they call home.

Of all the packages we produce, Power Leaders is among the most insightful. It reveals the breadth and scope of the businesses and sectors critical to our region, while also offering a snapshot of these executives’ personalities. It reveals something we’ve known all along: The people leading South Florida’s economy are our neighbors.
